WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26. MR. EDITOR; The present is an hour of great excitement in political circles he.e. The Democrats seem bent on tapping the main artery of the Republican party's stength-an honest ballot. They are clamoring for the repeal of the existing election laws, and a wilder political tempest seldom blows than they threaten to make of it. The President stands solitary and alone in the funnel of the storm. His expressions are watched by anxious partisans, and he stands as a light house on a storm-ridden and rocky coast to the Republicans. If that gleam of light should begone. Wild rumors constantly arise higher prices may cause the withdrawal of that the Executive will yield to the all orders. Better sell at a fair market Democracy. But it is generally thought among Republicans that the Democrats will be firmly met and whipped in the end. The accession of that party to power in both Houses of Congress has been marked by strong party symptoms.
